3.1 Possible points: Introduction with a clear line of argument (agree: it changed the world, but mainly benefited Europeans). Reasons for expansion: trade (spices, gold), new ship and navigation technology, spreading Christianity, competition between Portugal, Spain, the Netherlands and Britain. Benefits: new trade routes, wealth for European countries, exchange of crops (maize, potatoes), new knowledge of the world. Costs: conquest of the Americas; indigenous peoples killed by war and European diseases; land taken; the transatlantic slave trade that took millions of Africans; colonisation, including the Dutch settlement at the Cape in 1652 and its effect on the Khoikhoi and San. Conclusion linking back to the argument. [30]

3.2 Possible points: Causes: the discovery of gold on the Witwatersrand (1886); British wish to control the gold and the region; conflict over the rights of the uitlanders in the Transvaal; the Jameson Raid (1895–1896); the Boer republics' wish to stay independent. Course: early Boer successes, British reinforcements, guerrilla war. Effects: the British scorched-earth policy burnt farms; concentration camps where about 28 000 Boer women and children died; separate camps for black people, where at least 20 000 died; black South Africans served on both sides and lost land and hopes of rights. Peace: Treaty of Vereeniging (31 May 1902). Union of South Africa (1910): the colonies united under white minority rule; black South Africans were excluded from political power, which led to the formation of the South African Native National Congress (later the ANC) in 1912.
