QUESTION 5

5.1 5.1.1 À la carte menu: This menu has a large number and a wide selection of dishes. Each dish is individually priced and customers can choose whatever they like. Customers have to wait longer for their dishes to be cooked individually.

5.1.2 This menu offers a set number of courses with a very limited number of choices at each course. The price quoted is usually how much the meal will cost if the customer has one dish from each course. Customers would usually have to wait a short while, since the kitchen prepared dishes in advance on an expected number of customers for each dish.

5.1.3 This is the dish of the day and is planned and written on the display board daily. It is a dish offered as an alternative to the set main-course menu items. This dish lets the chef take advantage of food in season and special offers from suppliers.

5.1.4 This will be arranged by the food service, in consultation with the organiser of the function. The customers' requirements are considered with certain limits. Function menus are adjusted for a special traditional occasion such as a wedding or Christmas meal.

(4 × 2) (8)

5.3 5.3.1 The hot food must be served piping hot and cold food must be well cooled.

5.3.2 A variety of food sizes and shapes is required to make food an interesting meal. Avoid serving food that all has the same shape.

5.3.3 Descriptions such as crisp, crunchy, soft, smooth, rubbery and chewy.

5.3.4 The smell of a dish - it must relate to what is expected to be.

(4 × 2) (8)

5.4
- The purpose of the organisation.
- The selling price of the items on the menu must fall within the guidelines of the food service and the amount the customer is willing to pay.
- The selling price in commercial food services is based on the cost of food plus labour plus operational cost plus the profit. (3 × 2) (6)

5.5 Is a plain and simple meal and does not usually contain any hot dishes. It includes fruit or fruit juice, rolls, croissants, jams, preserves, and coffee or tea. (4)

5.6 The English breakfast consists of several courses with a choice of items for each course.
It is usually a table d'hôte and would contain some of the following: fresh fruit, juice, cereals, porridge, smoked fish kedgeree, eggs cooked in a variety of ways, bacon, sausages, tomatoes, mushrooms, toast, rolls, croissants, tea and coffee.

The American breakfast is similar to the English breakfast.
They both serve basically the same food.
They serve pancakes or flap jacks with maple syrup, instead of cereal, and they add potatoes to their main dish.
They drink a lot of coffee. (2 × 3) (6)

5.7 Relevé: Is a large joint of meat, which usually has to be carved. Potatoes and one or two vegetables are served with this course.
Entrée: This the first of the meat courses. It is accompanied by vegetables and it is elegantly garnished. It is small portions of meat, poultry or game, which is not roasted or grilled. When an entrée is followed by a relevé, vegetables are not served separately. (2 × 3) (6)

6.2 Advantages:

- Save time by removing the daily or weekly task of compiling menus
- You can produce the entire number of portions of each item to last the whole cycle
- Give greater efficiency in regard to time and labour
- Help the chef with ordering, as the menu dishes will always be known in advance
- Reduce waste (Any TWO)

Disadvantages:

- Caterer cannot easily take advantage of 'good buys' offered by suppliers on a daily or weekly basis
- When used in establishments with a captive clientele, the cycle has to be long enough so that customers do not get bored with repetition of dishes

(2 × 2) (4)
