4.5 (Mark as if serving the white wine logically/in an appropriate sequence)

- Obtain the wine from the bar.
- Check that the order is correct and that the wine is clear and at the correct temperature (range 10–12 degrees or cold)
- Take the wine to the table in an ice bucket and place the ice bucket in a stand.
- Mention the relevant mise en place for white wine service.
- Present the bottle to the host with the label showing – this allows him/her to check that the correct wine is to be served.
- Ensure the correct white wine glasses are placed on the table for the wine to be served.
- Make sure a service cloth is tied to the handle of the ice bucket/on the neck of the bottle. This is used to wipe away condensation and water from the outside of the bottle before pouring the wine.
- Using a waiter's friend, cut the foil all the way around, below or above the bottle rim at the top of the bottle (some bottles have small caps rather than foils). Only the top of the foil is then removed and the top of the cork is wiped with the service cloth.
- Remove the cork.
- Check cork/smell the cork in case the wine is 'corked'.
- Allow the host to inspect the cork.
- Place the cork in the ice bucket/on the service plate for inspection/as required by establishment. If the wine is a high-quality vintage wine, the cork would generally be placed on a side plate at the head of the host's cover. This cork should have the name and year of the wine printed on it.
- Wipe the inside of the neck of the bottle with the service cloth.
- Wipe the bottle dry.
- When pouring, hold the bottle so that the label may be seen. Use the waiter's cloth in the other hand, folded, to catch any drips from the neck of the bottle.

- Give a taste of the wine to the host, pouring from the right-hand side. He/she should acknowledge that the wine is suitable, i.e. that it has the correct taste, bouquet and temperature.
- Serve ladies first, then gentlemen, and the host last, always commencing from the host's right. However, nowadays service often follows from one customer to the next, anti-clockwise.
- Fill each glass two-thirds full or to the widest part of the bowl – whichever is lower. This leaves room for an appreciation of the bouquet.
- Replace the remaining wine in the wine bucket and refill the glasses when necessary.
- If a fresh bottle is required, then fresh glasses should be placed upon the table, and the host asked to taste the new wine.
- Twist the neck of the bottle and raise it at the same time to prevent drops of the wine from falling on the tablecloth (Any relevant answer 9 × 1) (9)

4.6
- Note table number/pax/waiter's name or signature/date
- Make use of selling techniques
- Be observant and use proper timing
- Smile, make eye contact and try to anticipate when the guest is ready to order
- Advise guests of any specials or other promotions, as well as allergies
