5.5 5.5.1

- Listen carefully to what the customer has to say and let them finish.✓ Do not get defensive. The customer is not attacking you personally; he or she has a problem and is upset.✓ Repeat back what you are hearing to show that you have listened.
- Ask questions in a caring and concerned manner.✓ The more information you can get from the customer, the better you will understand his or her perspective.✓ I have learned it is easier to ask questions than to jump to conclusions.
- Put yourself in their shoes.✓ As a business owner, your goal is to solve the problem, not argue.✓ The customer needs to feel like you are on his or her side and that you empathise with the situation.
- Apologise without blaming. ✓ When a customer senses that you are sincerely sorry, it usually diffuses the situation.✓ Do not blame another person or department. Just say, 'I am sorry about that.'
- Ask the customer, 'What would be an acceptable solution to you?' Whether or not the customer knows what a good solution would be, I have found it is best to propose one or more solutions to alleviate his or her pain.
- Become a partner with the customer in solving the problem. Solve the problem or find someone who can solve it – quickly! Research indicates that customers prefer the person they are speaking with to instantly solve their problem. When complaints are moved up the chain of command, they become more expensive to handle. (Any 4 × 2) (8)
