7.3
- Checking the levels of merchandise:
- This process takes place before and during the promotion where you have to check whether you have sufficient/enough merchandise for expected sales. This will curb/prevent losing sales and leaving customers unhappy because you do not have what they want.
- Checking the quality of promotional material:
- All promotional material should be clean, neat and attractive as this makes a good impression on customers. Posters should not be bended and the writing on posters must be clear and easy to read. Making use of clear, bright colours creates a good impression and will lead to customers buying from us, not elsewhere.
- Identifying promotional problems:
- Merchandise may be of poor quality or have factory faults that create a bad impression for the business.
- Taking corrective action:
- If there is a problem, act immediately and fix it. By taking corrective action, you will create a good impression for your business. (4 × 2) (8)
