QUESTION 2

Read the extract below and answer the questions.

BLACKBERRY

Today the amount of devices running on BlackBerry operating systems is extremely low. Last year in the third quarter, BlackBerry's OS had 0,1 per cent market share. Many BlackBerry devices now run on Android, though those also make up a small proportion of the overall smartphone market. Throughout 2016, BlackBerry didn't release any new phones that run on its mobile operating system, BB10.

However, the company is adamant that the OS isn't dead. 'BB10 has a strong following around the world in enterprise and government, as well as consumers in particular markets,' Alex Thurber, BlackBerry's senior vice president for global device sales, told The Financial Post.
