Time management is the process of planning and exercising conscious control of time spent on specific activities, especially to increase effectiveness, efficiency or productivity. It is a juggling act of the various demands of study, social life, employment, family and personal interests and commitments with the finiteness of time. Using time effectively gives people a choice on spending/managing activities at their own time and expediency.

It is a meta-activity with the goal to maximise the overall benefit of a set of other activities within the boundary condition of a limited amount of time, as time itself cannot be managed because it is fixed. Time management may be aided by a range of skills, tools and techniques used to manage time when accomplishing specific tasks, projects and goals complying with a due date. Initially, time management only referred to business or work activities, but eventually the term broadened to include personal activities as well. A time management system is a designed combination of processes, tools, techniques and methods. Time management is usually a necessity in any project development as it determines the project completion time and scope.

The major themes arising from the literature on time management include the following: Creating an environment conducive to effectiveness, setting of priorities, carrying out activities around prioritisation, the related process of reduction of time spent on nonpriorities and incentives to modify behaviour to ensure compliance with time-related deadlines.

[During / times that she acted as a substitute teacher, I always have found her to be a very professional, competent teacher in all respects, one that is organised and prepared. I highly recommend Princess Jackson and believe that she will make a fine teacher, one that any school would be fortunate to have.
