Youth can grow tourism sector

by Neo Semono

Young South Africans have an important role to play in South Africa's tourism industry. Government programmes are helping the youth build their own tourism businesses.

At the opening of the 2017 Tourism Indaba in Durban, former president Jacob Zuma talked of the opportunities for young South African entrepreneurs as the industry continues growing.

South Africa had a 13 per cent increase in visitors last year, he said, making tourism a sector of the economy that could change people's lives.

'In addition to job creation, tourism also provides opportunities for entrepreneurship. Given the low barriers to entry, it makes it possible for new entrants, particularly women and the youth, to get into business.'

Opportunities for young tourism entrepreneurs will open up when government rolls out its new 5-in-5 Tourism Growth Strategy. The plan will target new markets in Asia and the Middle East. It aims to increase the number of tourists visiting the country by five million in the next five years.

In line with government's policy of radical economic transformation, South African tourism will give black entrepreneurs the opportunity to showcase their businesses at trade shows and expos.

'We are looking to achieve at least a 30 per cent black ownership of the tourism industry,' he said. 'We have already begun to invest in transformation. At this year's Indaba, we have 90 black-owned tourism businesses from all nine provinces of South Africa, offering authentically South African tourism products, services and experiences.'

Tourism is opportunity

South Africa's youth need to believe they have what it takes to start and run a business before approaching government for help, according to the former Minister of Tourism, Tokozile Xasa.

Her ministry already has programmes to help new entrepreneurs put together business plans. But they are not looking for haphazard growth, Minister Xasa said at the recent Local Government Tourism Conference.

'We want sustainable growth that creates more opportunities for black people, especially people in rural areas, and for women, the youth and people living with disabilities. We want growth in tourism to lead to economic and social transformation for our country. Tourism is a half-exposed treasure chest. The lid is half opened and not many of our people can get to the jewels. If we all work together, we can prise that lid open, so that the benefits of tourism, and the natural and cultural heritage of our country can be shared by all the people in our country.'

Supporting enterprises

Government has created multiple programmes to make it easier for previously disadvantaged entrepreneurs to enter the tourism sector and grow existing businesses.

The Department of Tourism recently launched a new enterprise development programme. This provides incubators to small businesses at strategic tourism nodes, a tourism information portal to bridge the information gap between entrepreneurs and business opportunities, and business development and market access support to 300 enterprises countrywide.

'The incubator enables enterprises to obtain business support services offered mainly from the location of their businesses,' Minister Xasa said.

Moreover, in 2014, the Women in Tourism Forum was launched to deal with the challenges faced by women in an industry where most women work in low-level jobs. In 2016, the Department launched the Executive Development Programme to complement the 2014 programme.

Both initiatives are designed to build black women's leadership and business skills. The department also gave 20 young women full scholarships to study at Unisa's School of Business Leadership.

Tourism is an opportunity for youth to show their love for South Africa – its natural beauty and diversity, spectacular scenery and warm beaches. A new generation of young entrepreneurs can now promote their country to the world.

QUESTION 5

Study the scenario carefully and answer the questions.

A mini scenario: What's wrong with this team?

From the minute the project was announced and the 10 staff members of Global Travel were assigned, several of the members were overheard telling their colleagues that they didn't understand why they needed to be involved in this initiative. The members were not sure what was expected from them.

They wanted to continue working on their own as they have been doing for many years. One member was quoted saying, 'We have never worked on these types of initiatives in a group before. Why start now? What is someone trying to prove?'

Some of the prospective team members were concerned they would no longer have any autonomy. In fact, another member said to a colleague, 'Here we go! Someone is going to tell me exactly what to do and when to do it!' Some members felt that they did not have sufficient knowledge and skills for the tasks assigned to them.

Others were concerned that they would be spending so much time in meetings that their work would not get done and that they would therefore have to work overtime. Yet others were concerned that their efforts would not be recognised and that they would get 'lost' in the team.

After the team has been formed, it meets for a few months without dealing with any of these issues. More rumours are spread. The team performance is not effective at all.
